NOTES FROM OUR DIRECTOR, WILLIAM CALLOWAY

EXPANDING OUR CORE VALUES – EDUCATION AND COLLECTIONS

The content of the programs and exhibits offered by the museum are anchored by our core mission values of education and collections. To a large degree, the significance and value of a museum is determined by the integrity of its collection. How we then interpret those objects in the collection and present them provides the educational opportunities not only for our visiting school children but for all of our visitors,

Due to the depressed economy and changing priorities, the museum has endured 40% budget reduction in state support since 2008; $2,000,000 LESS. I am happy to report that in this legislative session that just ended, the museum was able to successfully restore a portion of the lost funding. As a result of this increased funding, we will be able to provide additional support to these core mission functions of education and collections. In the year 2000 the state museum had over 65 employees and by 2013 the staff had been reduced to 25. This increased funding will allow us to fill some of these vital positions in education and collections that have been unfunded for many years.

EDUCATION

The State Museum is part of the educational solution in the state. This past year we saw a 10% increase in our school visitation as close to 70,000 school children attended. Our educational content is standards based and we have programming and lessons available not only for grades K-12 but for higher-ed as well.

OUTREACH

We will offer and expand outreach education programs throughout the SC. in educational and museum communities particularly activities connected to the museum's observatory, planetarium, galleries and 4D theater. Funding would be used to focus on portable planetarium programming, outreach classroom lab experiences and distance learning, including live observatory telescope control. This would allow the museum to engage and educate students outside of the museum in disadvantaged areas across the state.

ON-SITE LESSONS

The museum will also expand in-house museum educational programming to meet the growing demand. New classes requiring specialized equipment and educators with a broader knowledge base are computer programming and robotics. These subjects are critical need areas in the state that connect to job readiness in growing technology fields.

COLLECTIONS

The museum's curatorial department is responsible for the research, sourcing, negotiating and acquisition of the artifacts that we choose to accession and add to our collection. Their work is critical to maintaining the museum's status as a nationally accredited institution

CURATORS

We will add two curators to the museum. To properly research, collect, preserve, register and store the items for our collection requires an enormous amount of time, talent and effort. The curators at the SC State Museum are responsible for acquiring and determining which important artifacts we will add that will continue to tell the stories of our state, from the past to the present through exhibitions and publications.

INVENTORY DATABASE

We will purchase an inventory system that would allow all areas of our 100,000+ item collection to be included in one comprehensive database. New database systems provide greater access of information for museum staff, increasing productivity and making their jobs more efficient. New systems also include images of objects that can also be accessible to the general public. These images and information are available to schools for educational purposes, other museums and the general public. Online collection databases have become an industry standard for museums and our collection is not currently accessible to the public.

The "Heart of a Museum" is the museum's collections and the educational value then communicated through its programming and exhibits. We are grateful for the support of the state legislature this past session and as a result the impact of the museum will continue to grow and expand.

SOUTH CAROLINA AND THE GREAT WAR

OPENING AUGUST 13

The State Museum will give guests an in-depth look at how one of the world's most devastating wars impacted life in South Carolina. Guests will discover what life was like in the state on the eve of war, why America decided to join the war and the efforts South Carolina took to build up forces. The exhibit will also give guests an up-close experience of what life was like for the 3, 000 South Carolina soldiers who served overseas as well as what life was like for South Carolinians back at home.

"This exhibit is not so much just the military experience, but impact of the war on the country and our state," says JoAnn Zeise history curator. "You can make the argument that World War I was the pivotal event of the 20th century, taking us from the 19th century, setting up World War II and the Cold War, and shaping the map in ways still relevant today."

In the beginning of the 20th century, South Carolina was still recovering from the Civil War. Other areas of the South rebounded with the rise of a "New South" but South Carolina was still struggling despite some bright spots of progress. President Woodrow Wilson had successfully kept America out of war, but that changed in 1918 when Germany reinstated unrestricted submarine warfare and with the discovery of the Zimmerman telegram.

"The Zimmerman Telegraph is a communication intercepted between Germany and Mexico," says Zeise. "Germany promised Mexico that if they join the war on the Central Power's side, to war, they will return the land America had taken from Mexico."

South Carolinians strongly supported the war and a renewed sense of patriotism swept across the state. Eight South Carolinians who joined the military earned the Medal of Honor. One of those soldiers was Lt. James Dozier. The exhibit will display the piston Dozier used during the engagement where he earned his Medal of Honor. Despite being wounded, he led his men to safety, killed an entire German machine-gun unit, and took several prisoners. Another soldier, whose name might sound familiar, is Guy Lipscomb Sr. Lipscomb's uniform, along with others will be rotated into the display during the exhibit. According to Zeise, the soldier's experience, including life in the trenches was dreadful. Some fought their terror and boredom by etching designs into shells and canteens known as trench art. Guests will be able to experience what it would have been like for soldiers by walking through a recreated trench, complete with trench art brought back from the war.

African American men were virtually excluded from volunteering for service. It was not until the draft that they were allowed to join segregated units. Black soldiers, like those in the 371st were transferred to French command. Despite inadequate training and racism, these units performed well in combat. The French awarded the 371st the Croix de Guerre and the Legion d'honneur.

In the homefront section, guests will see how South Carolina helped out with the war effort from planting war gardens, voluntarily rationing items such as coal and manufacturing items needed for war. As if the war wasn't hard enough on life in South Carolina, the Great Pandemic of the Flu of 1918 struck, killing hundreds of thousands of Americans.

The soldier's efforts did not go unnoticed once they returned home to South Carolina. There were parades, commemoration, medals awarded and Doughboy statues erected. War Gardens became Victory gardens to help supply devastated European allies with food and other supplies.

South Carolina and the Great War will immerse guests into life in South Carolina and those of the troops during World War I. South Carolina and the Great War opens August 13 and is free with general admission.

This hand-made bathing suit would have been worn with stockings and garters.

The shortened hem line, belt and form fitting material of this 1940's swim suit left little to the imagination at that time

1998 Sports Speedo. The high-cut fashion in swimsuits was prompted by the hugely popular television show Baywatch.

FROM BLOOMERS TO BIKINIS: A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE BATHING SUIT

Summer is here and bathing suits have been on our mind as we all try to escape the heat. With the help of the SCSM fashion collection, we're here to give you the skinny on your dip.

In the mid eighteenth century visits to the sea became a common leisure and vacation activity in American culture. New railroads traversed the country and helped to popularize the concept of vacation. Yet it was still indecent for men and women to swim together in public. To ensure privacy, beaches of the time featured rolling bathing machines: small changing rooms which would be dragged into the sea with female bathers inside. Women would also be covered in head-to-toe wool suits, stockings and shoes, making beach bathing seem more like a burden than a leisure activity.

By the 1920's women's bathing suits began to offer their owners slightly more freedom and suits shrank along with the diminishing hemlines of popular fashion. In 1921 Jantzen Knitting Mills began producing wool suits with elastic, creating a more streamlined silhouette.

By the early 1900s men and women swimming together became acceptable and bathing suit fashions began to loosen up; a little. Gone were full-body suits but women's bathing costumes were still far from skimpy.

In 1946 French fashion designer Louis Reard designed the bikini; a suit so scandalous that some models refused to pose in it. However, it would still be a few years before the modern bikini hit the shores of Myrtle Beach or Pawley's Island. During World War II the government aided the trend by requiring 10 percent less fabric in bathing suits in order to conserve materials.

By the 1950's bikinis had become glamorized by Hollywood fashions, and took their place at the heart of beach attire. While styles and fabrics have changed over the past sixty years, the bikini has remained a staple of the American swim suit wardrobe. It's safe to say swim suit preferences are as varied as their owners, but this season we can all agree to be thankful that the days of wool bathing dresses and swimming stockings are a distant memory.

LOVE UNDER THE STARS

Columbia native David Cadieu has always had an affinity for Roman history, so it was only natural that he choose the State Museum's recent blockbuster exhibit, Julius Caesar: Roman Military, Might and Machines and a planetarium show as his first date with Brittany Adams after seeing her tattoo that read, "All roads lead to Rome."

Cadieu has always had an interest in astronomy and had been wanting to visit the planetarium since the Windows to New Worlds renovation.

"Actually, going on our first date was the first time I had been to the planetarium since it was built," said Cadieu.

Fast forward to Sunday, June 26, David knew it was time to pop the question and the State Museum would be the perfect location. David and Brittany saw the 3:30 showing of From the Earth to the Universe, and with the hard work of museum employees Bryan DeMarcy and Susan Jones, "Brittany, will you marry me?" popped up on the screen while Coldplay's Yellow played in the background at the end of the show.

"It went so spectacularly well, I'm still walking on air about it," said Cadieu.

David and Brittany plan to marry in the fall of 2017 at his grandparent's farm in Ridgeland, SC and hopes to share this experience with his family in the future.

"I've got so much love for the state museum. I remember going there when I was a kid and one of the things I look forward to is the prospect of returning to the museum with kids of my own," says Cadieu. "I love education, I love learning, I love astronomy and I hope to share that interest with my kids."

RACE: ARE WE SO DIFFERENT? PROGRAMS

SPECIAL GROUP RATES AVAILABLE. HURRY! CLOSES SEPTEMBER 11.

Time is running out to see the State Museum's blockbuster exhibit. RACE: Are We So Different?, presented by Central Carolina Community Foundation is a project of the American Anthropological Association in collaboration with the Science Museum of Minnesota. This fascinating exhibit has attracted groups and camps from across the state giving them a scientific look at the history, and everyday impact of race.

In order to get the most out of this exhibit, the State Museum held a number of diversity training sessions for staff and volunteers as well as facilitator trainings. Since the exhibition is designed to make race an approachable discussion that promotes discovery and reflection, the museum began offering facilitator led discussion groups throughout the run of the exhibition. Guests who have viewed RACE: Are We So Different? can participate in a discussion group.

Business, families, churches or other groups of 10 or more guests are invited to reserve space within the museum to bring groups for facilitator lead workshops after experiencing the exhibit. Special group packages are available through the museum's group visits office. Race: Are We So Different? closes Sept. 11.

BOOK CLUB WITH RICHLAND LIBRARY TUESDAY, AUGUST 9 • 6:30 P.M.

RICHLAND

The State Museum will host a book club with group discussions in conjunction with Richland Library August 9 at 6:30 p.m. in the Gervais Street Room. Richland Library card holders will get free entry into the exhibit with the purchase of general admission on the night of the book club meeting.

The book club met July 12 to discuss Between the World and Me by Ta-Nehisi Coates. In this bestseller, Ta-Nehisi Coates explores his awakening about race the truth of his place in the world through a series of revelatory experiences to his son. He gives a powerful new framework for understanding America's history with race and the current experience of race in this country. Coates pivots from these big questions to the intimate concerns for his son. It is a combination of personal narrative and reimagined history.

The selected book for August 9 is The Girl Who Fell From the Sky, about the daughter of a Danish mother and a black G.I., who is orphaned, and thrust for the first time into a mostly black community when she goes to live with her African American grandmother. We see through the story of a light-skinned girl with blue eyes the struggle of growing up biracial. For more information on joining the book club visit scmuseum.org.

This year, the State Museum welcomed 52 new volunteers who trained to be docents, wayfinders, gallery monitors and museum camp helpers. The new volunteers joined an existing corps of 180. The corps of 232 volunteers contributed a total of 12,362 hours of volunteer service during the past fiscal year. Using this figure, our volunteers donated $251,079 worth of service to the museum from July 1, 2015 to June 30, 2016.

PLEASE REMEMBER TO GIVE TO THE SCSM FOUNDATION 2016 ANNUAL FUND

We have been astounded by the impact the "Windows to New Worlds" project has had on students across the State of South Carolina. In the month of May alone, over 17,000 students visited and experienced the wonders of the museum including our permanent exhibits, our planetarium, and our 4D Theater. Since the project's opening two years ago, we have accomplished so much and this is just the beginning.

One of our greatest accomplishments thus far is the Boeing Observatory, a one-of-a-kind educational facility that provides remote control access of the museum's 1926 Alvan Clark telescope from classrooms anywhere in South Carolina. The distance learning classes provide access to scientific equipment for astronomy educators in real time year-round with free access to all students and teachers in South Carolina. With over 100 teachers trained, we are proud to say that 1,700 students have participated in our distance learning classes.

We work extremely hard to come up with engaging programing that seizes the attention of students so that they walk away inspired and we're having the desired impact as demonstrated by these teachers' comments:

"It is difficult to get children excited about learning, but the SC Museum rose to the occasion. Our students were asking questions and finding answers within the different sections of the museum."

"The S.T.E.M program, "Stimulating Light" was awesome...Our students truly had a great educational and fun field trip- the best field trip I've been on as a teacher and/or chaperone!"

We need for you to be a part of this wonderful educational experience for our students. Please join us in supporting the Annual Fund of your South Carolina State Museum.

We have included a donation request form and envelope for your convenience. A gift of any size is critical to sustain our educational impact as we nurture young minds.

Thank you so much for your support of the South Carolina State Museum!! Only through generous donations like yours are we able to sustain the quality experiences that the museum provides not only our students but all our families and visitors!
